Buy Signals

June 20, 2006

Gold: $575.30

Silver: $10.26

Yen: 87.06

From the May 29, 2006 report:

“The Dollar has peaked, as described above and, as forecast, has completed its lower high, having turned convincingly. These short term pullbacks in the Yen, Euro, and Swiss Franc are just that.”

The Yen has completed its correction, after its initial strong run-up. Note the neckline support and higher right shoulder in the chart below. This pattern is entirely consistent with the fundamental background of waiting for a thoroughly discounted Fed meeting.

Striking its 200-day moving average, gold has corrected to the level contemplated as a possible level to which the metal could fall in the near term, after it had achieved the forecasted $600 level.

Silver has broken the $12 support area that I had felt would hold, and fallen to the lower support zone around $10.

Investors are 100% long, but trading portions for the Yen, gold and silver may return to all-out buy stances.

The Yen is the world's best fiat currency. I reiterate February's analysis that gold may achieve $850 by yearend, with a possible $2000 target in 2007. For silver, we'll just say "up", since the potential is so dramatic.
